- people will take the shortest path always, if they can bypass it they will
 - "how can I reduce my stress?"
 - sneakers - human buffer overflow (scene where they are brute forcing the front desk)
- cctv is no longer monitored in real time by humans, instead based on alerting and facial recognition
- interacting with social media allows a profile to be built
 - profiling allows threat actors to target you specifically
- technology/people/physical = red teaming
- delivering a package always looks less suspicious as nobody is expecting a threat actor to deliver something
- highlighter and uv light can show keypad entry codes
 - alternative is uv powder
- gaining access
 - blue staff lanyard
 - look for social media to duplicate
 - heat warming pad for bypassing door sensors
 - look like you belong
 - can you acquire any work wear
- never underestimate the power of user training
 - educate
- rfid cards
 - key fob can detect low or high frequency
 - combination of low frequency and high frequency means it falls to the lowest common denominator
 - low frequency has the poorest security and are the cheapest
 - the card number is usually written on the card
 - building number and card number
 - target the lowest card numbers, may
 - long range rfid reader can have batteries added and made portable
 - can be placed beside a standard card reader
 - added points for adding a post it not saying "test card reader, please ignore"
- hacking of mat
- hawaii missile alert story
 - old headsets used to broadcast voice in the clear and you could hear the passwords being reset from the carpark
- shred-x brands its own keys which are all the same
- shredding bins are a gold mine
- dumpster diving
 - floor plans
 - user lists
 - memos

- board papers
 - equipment/software
 - policies/regulations
 - hostnames
- IT people especially love to correct you and talk about their environments
 - Vendors use this to their advantage
- Langer experiment
 - the shortcut is using the "because"
 - Can I use the photocopier because I am in a rush
 - Can I use the photocopier because I have only 5 copies to do
- printing out a logo and attaching to a commonly used car the organisation uses
- authority
 - look like you are supposed to be there
 - dress the part
 - high vis
 - holding a clipboard
- disconnect a users network cable, then ask if they are having network issues. Pretend to be a IT technician
- Social engineering toolkit www
- staff and their badges of honour
 - usually the cheapest solution
 - are they tracked/time period?
- council padlocks can be bypassed by getting the code from the padlock and going to mr mint and ask them to create the key
- bypass tailgates by using crutches, wheelchairs
